Students in the Graduate School are represented collectively by the Graduate Student Assembly (GSA), which provides a forum for students to address issues across the Graduate School and University. The GSA consults with the dean and other administrators on proposed changes in Graduate School policy, raises concerns expressed by the student body, nominates the student members of all Graduate School standing committees, and administers a conference travel fund for graduate students. Representatives to the assembly are elected by students in individual departments and degree programs. Each department or program has at least one student representative, with additional representatives allotted proportionally by size of the student population.
